A worldwide social issue dramatization, produced by Sooraj Barjatya. The Sultan, a simple man of the land, raises a family in a village. During the partition of India and Pakistan, the land, village and a whole lot of souls are under threat of communal division. A real life story is how the village is united, its people come together and live a tale of courage and resistance. It's a tale of how a simple man of the land fights against all odds and fights the might of corruption, to save his village, his people and himself. The film stars Salman Khan as Sultan, an ordinary man who inherits a land from his father and whose family bears the name Sultan. He also has a wife and four children. It is a story about the time when India became independent from British Raj, a time when the Indian subcontinent was separated by two countries, creating a war-torn area between two countries. Sultan is a village which lives in the beautiful valleys of Kashmir. In this area, which was once a kingdom, there are two cities: one Muslim and the other Hindu. The story starts in 1947 when the Indian subcontinent became independent. However, there is a big problem. Kashmir is separated between India and Pakistan. Indians are struggling to live in the valley while Pakistanis live in the mountains. Both countries are fighting for the independence of their land. Indians are part of India, while the other part is a Muslim majority, where Pakistanis are living. A violent situation is created between both countries. The Sultan and his family live in a village named Sultan. The villagers have a customs of a Muslim and a Hindu village. The village is divided into two communities. Each community also has their own customs. It is a story of the community that is divided by the Independence of India and Pakistan. What is good for the Pakistanis is bad for the Indians. So there is a rivalry between both countries. With the partition of India and Pakistan, the people in the area are divided into two villages. And, in between, there is a conflict between the two countries. The partition of India and Pakistan has created a war-torn area. The people in this area suffer a lot of problems because of the partition. The relationship between India and Pakistan is the cause of the problem. India is the motherland, while Pakistan is the fatherland. So the people of the area are divided. The independence of Pakistan has caused huge problems. The two countries are fighting for the land of 82157476af
